

MANY ATTEND LIBRARY OPENING AT ORLAND

The new public library sponsored by the Woman's club of Orland Park was formally opened in the Purple Candle building on 143rd street in Orland Park Wednesday afternoon and fully over 100 persons attended the opening.

The library headquarters are very cozy and attractive and will be much appreciated, not only by the students of the local school, but by the general public as well.

The library is a WPA project and under this project WPA furnished 350 books, a librarian, cards, records and a janitor. Mr. Roy Loebe owner of the building in which the library is housed, generously offered the library room free of rent for two years.

The librarian in charge is Miss Stewart sent by the WPA who has had considerable library experience. Commencing with this Saturday afternoon at 1:30 o'clock, and every Saturday thereafter a story hour will be held for children from 6 to 14 years of age. Mrs. Mabel Kammann will be in charge.

The library has been enriched by the donation of a number of books and magazines by private parties and the Orland Woman's club will gladly receive donations and will be very grateful for same.

Orland Park is to be complimented for having such a spirited organization as the Woman's club. It is hoped that the new venture will prove a decided success.

Women's Club Members Tour Palos Preserves

The conservation department of the third district of Illinois Women's clubs, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Ward of Palos Park, held an all day meeting and outing at Mrs. Ward's home Wednesday. In the morning, the women enjoyed rambling thru the acres of natural wood and looking at the wild flowers of rare and many variety. Mrs. Ward's herb garden was also inspected.

Each woman brought her own lunch and at noon they gathered in the dining room of Mrs. Ward's Tea room, called Brookwood and ate their lunch. The hostess served hot coffee, which the women paid for, the proceeds from which are to be used to plant trees along Western avenue in Worth township.

After lunch a tour was made to the C. C. C. Camp on 119th street. Here the women were given a gracious reception by the superintendent, Mr. Mack and his officers who conducted the group thru the many buildings which were pleasant and clean. It was an interesting trip.

Next the women, sixty in number, climbed into two large CCC trucks and were then driven through the 28 miles of roads in this state park. This trip reminded the women of the old fashioned hay rack rides, and much merriment was forthcoming. The drivers and officers proved to be splendid hosts.

Upon returning to the Camp, they all gathered in the mess hall where Mr. Mack addressed the group. His subject was, "Conservation from the standpoint of natural resources."

Mr. Mack told how they were trying to bring back as much as possible of the natural flowers and wild shrubs to this spot which have been destroyed by thoughtless people who pulled the flowers up by the roots, only to later be thrown by the wayside to die.

The work program of this camp will last 8 or ten years. Among the things already built and to be built are: 6 toboggan slides with power control at the top; 10 dance platforms; 10 thousand new picnic tables; 4 large and 6 small shelters; several parking spaces; walking trails and bridle paths.

An appeal is being made to the citizens of our land, to help preserve this natural beauty spot by not pulling or digging up the wild flowers and thus preserve to posterity, this resource of natural beauty.

Only one thing marred the trip—that was at a lovely shelter, where a fire was burning in the fireplace, the timbers of which were ably defaced with carvings of names, initials and objects. If our citizenry could be brought to understand that they are destroying beauty in our land, they more than likely would not do this unsightly hand work.

Pounding out twelve hits behind Pat Homering's fine pitching performance, the Tinley Park team had little trouble defeating the Blue Island Troublemakers 7 to 2. This victory puts Tinley in a five way hit for first place in the Southwest League.

While mates were rifling hits all over the diamond, Homering held the Islanders to seven scattered singles. A misjudged fly ball and two hits in the ninth prevented Pat from registering a shutout in his first start of the year.

The gang had been trailed to the Lincoln Dixie theatre. They had pried open a rear window and were just preparing to enter when the police entered the theatre from the front entrance. By the time the police could get to the alleyway the robber gang had beat a hasty retreat to a waiting car and were just driving out of the alleyway when the police turned into the alley. They managed to escape but by a small margin.

Orland Park Piano Recital Delightful Affair

The piano recital given by the pupils of Mrs. H. Adele Cooper at the Orland Park M. E. church last Thursday evening, May 6th provided an evening of excellent music and real entertainment that reflected great credit on the pupils themselves as well as on their teacher.

The program was opened by three selections played by members of the beginners class—"The Glider" by Mildred Doctor, "Swing Song" by Lela Mae Smith and selections by Beverly Powell. These beginners did remarkably well and showed much promise for the future.

An interesting number, "Rhythm Picture" pieces was put on by Eleanor Knox, Mildred Doctor and Eleanor Cooper. In this number two selections "On the Christmas Tree" and "Pumpkin, Pumpkin" were played as a duet by Eleanor Knox and Mildred Doctor while Eleanor Cooper sang and illustrated the idea of the song in colored chalk at the black board.

An innovation was provided in a skit entitled "Mother", depicting the trials and tribulations of a mother with a household of daughters and their girl friends. This provided good heartful comedy as well as a vehicle for the display of the musical accomplishments of each member of the cast. Vera Zerbs took the part of the mother, Lucile Doctor that of the music teacher, Marion Taylor that of the radio pianist, Lois Cooper, Ruth Gee, June Schussler, Deloris Doctor and Hilda Zerbs as the daughters and Jean Taylor, Eleanor Knox and Eleanor Cooper as friends.

Merrill Cooper acted as radio announcer. During the progress of the play the following numbers were introduced: Solo—"Little Old Lady" by Eleanor Cooper; "Tumbling Down the Haystack" by Jean Taylor; Guitar serenade, Ruth Gee; "Butterfly" by Deloris Doctor; "Thru the Air" by Hilda Zerbs; "The Swan" by June Schussler; "Carrier Pigeon" and "All About a Frog", Eleanor Knox; "Mister Sparrow" by Virginia Gee; "On the Meadows" and "Rabbits Revel" and "Romp Away" by Ruth Gee. "Liebestraum" by Marion Taylor. "Playing the Harp" by Eleanor Cooper. "Flower Song" by Vera Zerbs and the solo "Mother" by Hilda Zerbs. The entire play was well acted and showed careful and painstaking coaching and the various musical numbers were rendered in a pleasing and gratifying manner.

A special number "Spring, Beautiful Spring" as arranged for saxophone, marimba, drum and piano by Mrs. Cooper and her sons Merrill and Floyd. The Mendelssohn overture and Midsummer Nights Dream as arranged for six hands, were played by Mrs. Cooper, Lucile Doctor and Marion Taylor.

Mokena Has An Item Fit For Mr. Ripley

Mokena has a curiosity which would make a fit subject for Ripley's "Believe It or Not".

About 20 years ago when Andrew Wachter purchased a lot from the late Ozias McGovney, there was a wire fence around the lot. Mr. Wachter tore down the fence, but one fence post, just outside the lot line was left standing. A few small sprouts of a mulberry tree were growing at the foot of the fence post, but during the 20 years these sprouts have grown into a tree and by a strange kink of nature, the fence post is now in the heart of the tree. There is a small opening in the tree showing the top of the fence post.

The average small incorporated village has much difficulty in collecting water revenue from the users of village water, due chiefly to the failure of the village officials to enforce the collection of such revenue.

Orland Park has had the same experience and has found that the best way to enforce collection of water revenue is to shut off the delinquent water users. The past week Police Chief Ed. Pezler shut off a number of the delinquent water users and it was not long before they paid up when they saw that the village really meant business. By the forepart of the week over $100 in delinquent water tax was paid into the village clerk's office.

THE GARDEN MURDER CASE

CHAPTER XIV

by S. S. VAN DINE

Copyright S. S. Van Dine
WNU Service

I wandered into the den, the door of which was ajar, and walked aimlessly about the room, looking at the various pictures and etchings. Just then Vance entered. As he came in he threw the door open wider, half pocketing me in the corner behind it, where I was not immediately noticeable. I was about to speak to him, when Zalia Graem came in.

"Philo Vance." She called his name in a low, tremulous voice. He turned and looked at the girl with a quizzical frown.

"I've been waiting in the dining-room," she said. "I wanted to see you before you spoke to the others."

I realized immediately, from the tone of her voice, that my presence had not been noticed.

Vance continued to look squarely at the girl, but did not speak. She came very close to him now.

"Tell me why you have made me suffer so much," she said.

"I know I have hurt you," Vance returned. "But the circumstances made it imperative. Please believe that I understand more of this case than you imagine I do."

"I am not sure that I understand," The girl spoke hesitantly. "But I want you to know that I trust you." She looked up at him, and I could see that her eyes were glistening. Slowly she bowed her head. "I have never been interested in any man," she went on—and there was a quaver in her voice.

"The men I have known have all made me unhappy and seemed always to lead me away from the things I longed for. . . . She caught her breath. "You are the one man I have ever known whom I could—care for."

So suddenly had this startling confession come, that I did not have time to make my presence known, and after Miss Graem finished speaking I remained where I was, lest I cause her embarrassment.

Vance placed his hands on the girl's shoulders and held her away from him.

"My dear," he said, with a curiously suppressed quality in his voice, "I am the one man for whom you should not care." There was no mistaking the finality of his words.

Vance smiled wistfully at the girl. "Would you mind waiting in the drawing-room a little while? . . ."

She gave him a searching look and, without speaking, turned and went from the den.

Vance stood for some time gazing at the floor with a frown of indecision, as if loath to proceed with whatever plans he had formulated.

I took this opportunity to come out from my corner, and just as I did so Floyd Garden appeared at the hall door.

"Oh, hello, Vance," he said. "I didn't know you had returned until Zalia just told me you were in here. Anything I can do for you?"

Vance swung around quickly. "I was just going to send for you. Everyone here?"

Garden nodded gravely. "Yes, and they're all frightened to death—except Hammie. He takes the whole thing as a lark. I wish somebody had shot him instead of Woody."

"Will you send him in here," Vance asked. "I want to talk to him. I'll see the others presently."

Garden walked up the hall, and at that moment I heard Burke speaking to Markham at the front door. Markham immediately joined us in the den.

"Hope I haven't kept you waiting," he greeted Vance.

"No. Oh, no," Vance leaned against the desk. "Just in time."

Markham had barely seated himself when Hammie strutted into the den with a jovial air. Vance nodded to him brusquely.

"Mr. Hammie," he said, "we're wholly familiar with your philosophy of minding your own business and keeping silent in order to avoid all involvements. A defensible attitude—but not in the present circumstances. This is a criminal case, and in the interest of justice to everyone concerned, we must have the whole truth. Yesterday afternoon you were the only one in the drawing-room who had even a partial view down the hallway. And we must know everything you saw, no matter how trivial it may seem to you."

Hammie gave in. "First of all, then," said Vance, "without relaxing the stern gaze, when Miss Graem left the room, ostensibly to answer a telephone call, did you notice exactly where she went?"

"Not exactly," Hammie returned; "but she turned to the left, toward the den. You understand, of course, that it was impossible for me to see very far down the hall, even from where I sat."

"Quite," Vance nodded. "And when she came back to the drawing-room?"

"I saw her first opposite the den door. She went to the hall closet where the hats and wraps are kept, and then came back to stand in the archway until the race was over. After that I didn't notice her either coming or going."

"And what about Floyd Garden?" asked Vance. "You remember he followed Swift out of the room. Did you notice which way they went, or what they did?"

"As I remember, Floyd put his arm around Swift and led him into the dining-room. After a few moments they came out. Swift seemed to be pushing Floyd away from him, and then he disappeared down the hall toward the stairs. Floyd stood outside the dining-room door for several minutes, looking after his cousin, and then went down the hall after him; but he must have changed his mind, for he came back into the drawing-room in short order."

"And you saw no one else in the hall?"

"No. No one else."

"Very good," Vance took a deep inhalation on his cigarette. "And now let's go to the roof-garden, figuratively speaking. You were in the garden, waiting for a train, when the nurse was almost suffocated with bromin gas in the vault. The door into the passageway was open, and if you had been looking in the direction you could easily have seen who passed up and down the corridor." Vance looked at the man significantly. "And I have a feeling you were looking through that door, Mr. Hammie. Your reaction of astonishment when we came out on the roof was a bit overdone. And you couldn't have seen much of the city from where you had been standing, don't you know?"

Hammie cleared his throat and grinned.

"You have me there, Vance," he admitted with familiar good-humor. "Since I couldn't make my train, I thought I'd satisfy my curiosity and stick around for a while to see what happened. I went out on the roof and stood where I could look through the door into the passageway—I wanted to see who was going to get hell next, and what would come of it all."

She Gave Him a Searching Look.

"Thanks for your honesty," Vance's face was coldly formal. "Please tell us now exactly what you saw through that doorway while you were waiting, as you've confessed, for something to happen."

Again Hammie cleared his throat. "Well, Vance, to tell you the truth, it wasn't very much. Just people coming and going. First I saw Garden go up the passageway toward the study; and almost immediately he went back downstairs. Then Zalia Graem passed the door on her way to the study. Five or ten minutes later the detective—Heath, I think his name is—went by the door, carrying a coat over his arm. A little later—two or three minutes, I should say—Zalia Graem and the nurse passed each other in the passageway, Zalia going toward the stairs, and the nurse toward the study. A couple of minutes after that Floyd Garden passed the door on his way to the study again."

"Just a minute," Vance interrupted. "You didn't see the nurse return downstairs after she passed Miss Graem in the passageway?"

Hammie shook his head emphatically. "No. Absolutely not."

Vance took another deep puff on his cigarette. "One more thing, Mr. Hammie: while you were out there in the garden, did anyone come out on the roof from the terrace gate?"

"Absolutely not. I didn't see anybody at all on the roof."

"And when Garden had returned downstairs, what then?"

"I saw you come to the window and look out into the garden. I was afraid I might be seen, and the minute you turned away I went over to the far corner of the garden, by the gate. The next thing I knew, you gentlemen were coming out on the roof with the nurse."

Vance moved forward from the desk against which he had been resting. "Thank you, Mr. Hammie. You've told me exactly what I wanted to know. It may interest you to learn that the nurse informed us she was struck over the head in the passageway, on leaving the study, and forced into the vault which was full of bromin fumes."

Zalia Graem was the first to enter the den. She glanced at Vance appealingly and seated herself without a word. She was followed by Miss Weatherby and Kroon, who sat down uneasily beside her on the davenport. Floyd Garden and his father came in together. Miss Beeton was just behind them and stopped hesitantly in the doorway, looking uncertainly at Vance.

"Did you want me too?" she asked diffidently.

"I think it might be best, Miss Beeton," said Vance. "We may need your help."

At that moment the front door bell rang, and Burke ushered Doctor Siefert into the den.

"I just got your message, Mr. Vance, and came right over." He looked about the room questioning-

"I thought you might care to be present," Vance said, "in case we can reach some conclusion about the situation here. I know you are personally interested. Otherwise I wouldn't have telephoned you."

"I'm glad you did," said Siefert blandly, and walked across to a chair before the desk.

Vance lighted a cigarette with slow deliberation, his eyes moving aimlessly about the room. There was a tension over the assembled group.

The taut silence was broken by Vance's voice. He spoke casually, but with a curious emphasis.

"I have asked you all to come here this afternoon in the hope that we could clear up the very tragic situation that exists."

He was interrupted by the startling sound of a shot ominously like that of the day before. Everyone in the room stood up quickly, aghast at the sudden detonation. Everyone except Vance. And before anyone could speak, his calm authoritative voice was saying:

"There is no need for alarm. Please sit down. I expressly arranged that shot for all of you to hear—it will have an important bearing on the case. . . ."

Burke appeared at the door.

"Was that all right, Mr. Vance?"

"Quite all right," Vance told him. "The same revolver and blanks?"

"Sure. Just like you told me. And from where you said. Wasn't it like you wanted it?"

"Yes, precisely," nodded Vance. "Thanks, Burke."

The detective grinned broadly and moved away down the hall.

"That shot, I believe," resumed Vance, sweeping his eyes lazily over those present, "was similar to the one we heard yesterday afternoon—the one that summoned us to Swift's dead body. It may interest you to know that the shot just fired by Detective Burke was fired from the same revolver, with the same cartridges, that the murderer used yesterday—and from about the same spot."

"But this shot sounded as if it were fired down here somewhere," cut in Siefert.

"Exactly," said Vance with satisfaction. "It was fired from one of the windows on this floor."

"But I understand that the shot yesterday came from upstairs," Siefert looked perplexed.

"That was the general, but erroneous, assumption," explained Vance. "Actually it did not. Yesterday, because of the open roof door and the stairway, and the closed door of the room from which the shot was fired, and mainly because we were psychologically keyed to the idea of a shot from the roof, it gave us all the impression of coming from the garden."

Zalia Graem turned quickly to Vance.

"The shot yesterday didn't sound to me as if it came from the garden. When I came out of the den I wondered why you were all hurrying upstairs."

Vance returned her gaze squarely.

"No, it must have sounded much closer to you," he said. "But why didn't you mention that important fact yesterday when I talked with you about the crime?"

"I—don't know," the girl stammered. "When I saw Woody dead up there, I naturally thought I'd been mistaken."

"But you couldn't have been mistaken," returned Vance, half under his breath. "And after the revolver had been fired yesterday from a downstairs window, it was surreptitiously placed in the pocket of Miss Beeton's top-coat in the hall closet. Had it been fired from upstairs it could have been hidden to far better advantage somewhere on the roof or in the study." He turned again to the girl. "By the by, Miss Graem, didn't you go to that closet after answering your telephone call here in the den?"

The girl gasped.

"How—how did you know?"

"You were seen there," explained Vance.

The girl turned back to Vance with flashing eyes. "I'll tell you why I went to the hall closet. I went to get a handkerchief I had left in my handbag. Does that make me a murderer?"

"No. Oh, no," Vance shook his head and sighed. "Thank you for the explanation. . . . And will you be so good as to tell me exactly what you did last night when you answered Mrs. Garden's summons?"

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Prevent Quarrels.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Promoting Peace.

In a world largely dominated by the philosophy that might is right, and in which men are urged to assert themselves and demand their rights, exacting them even by lawless and violent methods, it is increasingly difficult to proclaim the truth that meekness is not weakness and that the Christian virtues of patience and long-suffering are not simply outmoded theories which do not fit our modern world.

The story of Isaac, the second of the patriarchs, is instructive from beginning to end. The five chapters preceding our lesson merit careful reading. Isaac had come through many blessed experiences and had also sadly tasted the defeat of unbelief and sin before we reach the time of our lesson. Fearing a famine, and evidently not being certain that God would care for him, he had gone down from the promised land, and was dwelling in the land of the Philistines. But God had not forsaken him, and even there he blessed him.

I. Peace, Prosperity, and Envy (vv. 12-17).

Isaac was at peace although he was in the enemy's territory. God had given him great prosperity with the result that the Philistines hated him. Times have changed, but men are the same. Many are they who will not have the Lord Jesus Christ to rule over them, but who cast envious glances toward those who because they have honored God have been honored by him with peace of heart and have prospered in whatever they do. (Read Psalm 1.)

Note that Isaac's testimony is strengthened by his willingness to yield even what was his right, rather than cause contention. Undoubtedly there are times when one must defend his name and his possessions, but all too often those who "stand up for their rights" have wrecked homes, churches, and nations, and have gained nothing but an empty victory.

II. Peace in the World Is Temporary (vv. 18-21).

Isaac moved on and digged more wells, and for a time he was again at peace, but not for long. He was still in the land of the Philistines. We are in the world. We long for peace, we would throw all our influence on the side of peace. But let us not be misled, for as long as sin is in the world there will be strife and war.

Many noble Christian men and women have permitted their God-given hatred of war and killing to mislead them into support of unscriptural and impossible peace programs, often to the loss of their interest in the preaching of the gospel and the winning of souls to Christ.

But is there then never to be "peace on earth?"

III. Perfect Peace in the Presence of God (vv. 22-25).

When Isaac came up into Canaan the land which God had promised him, he found permanent peace and renewed fellowship with God. Even so, the Christian man and woman who will step out of a spirituality-destroying fellowship with the world and will come wholly over into the spiritual Canaan will find true peace and intimate communion with God.

A broader application of the same truth brings before us the teaching of Scripture that when the One who has a right to reign, the Lord Jesus Christ, returns to take his throne, then and not before, will peace cover the earth. In the meantime those who bear the beautiful name Christian, who are true followers of the Prince of Peace, will give themselves to such patient, loving, and long-suffering testimony to Him that their personal influence will be toward peace in the home, in the church, in the community, in the earth.

Always remember that God's Word, the Bible, is our guide. Let us read it diligently, intelligently, prayerfully. To help the reader to do this, the writer of these notes will be glad to supply without cost or obligation a Bible-reading calendar with a workable plan for reading the blessed Book through in a year. If possible enclose a stamped and self-addressed envelope with your request.

Faults Showing Up

The good often sigh more over little faults than the wicked over great. Hence an old proverb, that the stain appears greater according to the brilliancy of what it touches. —Palmieri.

Sin of Not Doing

Doing nothing at all is often the worst kind of wrong doing. Simply failing to do what we ought to do may be more inexcusable than any mistake in our best methods of doing.

Parading the Fashions

A STYLE show De Luxe for De Ladies on this De Lightful Spring day!

Betty Ann feels just a bit the most elegant of the three for her housecoat is superlative. She has "skirts" like the ladies in the feminine yesterdays; her basque is form-fitting; her sash has a bow, and her sleeves puff. The illusion is so perfect that she is about to reach for smelling salts or a sprig of old lavender.

Matrons Have Vanity, Too.

Mama, very young for her years, can not resist styles that bring more compliments her way. The no-belt feature of this one is definitely new, and does wonders for the figure a bit past the slim stage. The continuing collar, which in soft pastels is always flattering, gives the break required by the all-in-one waist and skirt. The fitted top and flaring bottom make for style plus comfort, a demand matrons, even though youthful, always make.

Parties and Picnics.

Winifred on the left is privately making up her mind to have a housecoat, too; though she is mightily pleased with the way her print has turned out. She chose this style because the fitted, broken waist line and front seamed skirt are so very slenderizing. She's on her way to the 4-H meeting now and has only stopped to remind Betty Ann of the picnic "The Jolly Twelve" are having on Tuesday.

The Patterns.

Pattern 1285 comes in sizes 12-20 (30 to 40). Size 14 requires 3 3/4 yards of 39 inch material.

Pattern 1282 is for sizes 14-20 (32 to 44 bust). Size 16 requires 5 1/2 yards of 39 inch material. It requires 2 1/2 yards of ribbon for tie belt.

Pattern 1983 is for sizes 36 to 50. Size 38 requires 5 1/2 yards of 39 inch material. With the short sleeves it requires only 5 yards of 39 inch material.

Why Laxatives Fail In Stubborn Constipation

Twelve to 24 hours is too long to wait when relief from clogged bowels and constipation is needed, for then enormous quantities of bacteria accumulate, causing GAS, indigestion and many restless, sleepless nights.

If you want REAL, QUICK RELIEF, take a liquid compound such as Adierika. Adierika contains SEVEN cathartic and carminative ingredients that act on the stomach and BOTH bowels. Most "overnight" laxatives contain one ingredient that acts on the lower bowel only.

Adierika's DOUBLE ACTION gives your system a thorough cleansing, bringing out old poisonous waste matter that may have caused GAS pains, sour stomach, headaches and sleepless nights for months. Adierika relieves stomach GAS at once and usually removes bowel congestion in less than two hours. No waiting for overnight results. This famous treatment has been recommended by many doctors and druggists for 35 years. Take Adierika one-half hour before breakfast or one hour before bedtime and in a short while you will feel marvelously refreshed. At All Leading Druggists.

Over-Estimate
Some think they are "revolutionary" when they are only "quarrelsome."

Post AuxiliaryBy Mrs. Viola Carr, Unit Pub. Chairman.That little red flower from "among the crosses row on row", which Americans wear each year to honor the World War dead, has become an important means of alleviating the sufferings resulting from the War.From the poppy each year the American Legion Auxiliary raises approximately $1,000,000 for the relief and rehabilitation of disabled veterans, and for the care of fatherless children of veterans. This money forms the principal support of the vast rehabilitation and child welfare program carried out constantly by the Auxiliary in cooperation with The American Legion.Women in almost every city and town in the United States take part in the memorial poppy program. The American Legion Auxiliary, with its 425,000 members and 9,000 local units, sponsor the work, aided by women and girls from other groups.
Last year nearly 10,000,000 of the little flowers were distributed and this year the number is expected to increase to 12,000,000.This year poppies were made for the Auxiliary in 65 Veterans' hospitals and poppy work rooms located in 40 different states.The poppy is the symbol of the supreme sacrifice. It stands for the highest type of patriotism we can conceive. Wearing this little flower awakens in our hearts a deeper conception of our duties to our country.
It reminds us that life itself is not too much to give if our country is in danger and gives us inspiration to serve in peace with the same spirit of patriotic devotion that inspired those who died among the poppies of France.Everyone can wear a poppy to show that he remembers and is grateful for the gallant sacrifices made for Americans security and democracy.

Reflecting the arrival of warm weather which lures children to outdoor pursuits, the May safety poster distributed by the Chicago Motor Club to 31,000 classrooms in Illinois and Indiana carries the warning, "Play Away From Traffic."The lessons, which go with the posters, stress the danger of playing in streets.For younger children the loose-leaf lessons sheet suggests that children arrange pantomimes demonstrating that they are playing away from traffic. Another suggestion for younger children is a "quick response" game, in which pupils tell where it is safe to play marbles, fly a kite, skip rope, and other games.Intermediate grades are provided with a form to record their playing habits, an essay lesson on safety, and suggestions for a series of talks on safe places to play.More advanced grades are urged to promote safety play yard contests to encourage the development of home play facilities.Mays, Pole Sitter No. 1,

May 31.Mays by dint of establishing the

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE CHURCHES

"Adam and Fallen Man" was the subject of the Lesson-Sermon in all Churches of Christ, Scientist, on Sunday, May 9.The Golden Text was, "As we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly" (I Cor. 15:49).Among the citations which comprised the Lesson-Sermon was the following from the Bible: "There is therefore now no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. For the law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death" (Romans 8:1, 2).The Lesson-Sermon also included the following passages from the Christian Science textbook,
"Science and Health with Key to the Scriptures," by Mary Baker Eddy:
"If we were to derive all our conceptions of man from what is seen between the cradle and the grave, happiness and goodness would have no abiding-place in man, and the worms would rob him of the flesh;
but Paul writes: 'The law of the Spirit of life in Christ Jesus hath made me free from the law of sin and death'" (p. 244).COMMUNITY SUNDAY SCHOOL

Mokena D.H. I. A. Organized

Officers and advisers present at the organization meeting of the Mokena Community Dairy Herd Improvement Association last Wednesday at St. Mary's hall, there. The association was hailed as having the most efficient set-up for dairy herd improvement work in Illinois, because of the close radius in which the members reside. Left to right are, seated: A. C. Gauthier, secretary-treasurer; Konrad Bormet, president; John Schilling, vice president; Marion Owen, director; and standing: J. G. Cash, specialist in dairy herd improvement, University of Illinois; L. W. Braham, farm adviser; Donald Swinford, tester, and Charles Erickson, director.

Dairymen of the Mokena Community, Will County, are establishing a precedent in effective organization for improvement in dairy stock and increase in net farm income. L. W. Braham, farm adviser, said today, in announcing the organization of the Will County No. 1 dairy herd improvement association.

"All the members of this association," he said, "live in one community and within a small radius. Their co-operation will therefore be that much more valuable, and the practical details of work will be more easily carried out."

Dairymen at the meeting showed good understanding of the purpose of organization for dairy herd improvement, and Mr. Braham indicated that large benefits are to be derived both in weeding out milch cows who are low butterfat and milk producers, also in controlling the amount and kind of feed.

The association will employ Donald Swinford as tester. He will visit each herd once a month, to make tests of butterfat and milk production, and to weigh feed. Records are kept of each cow, and the dairyman is thus able, by studying the data, to determine exactly where his profits of operation lie.

Extension of the program, Mr. Braham pointed out, will come in the organizing of bull association, to test sires having the hereditary quality of improving the butterfat and milk production of their daughters.

Mr. Braham and J. G. Cash, specialist in dairy herd improvement at the University of Illinois were present at the first meeting Wednesday April 28.

Officers are Konrad Bormet, president; John Schilling vice president; A. C. Gauthier, secretary-treasurer;

Marion Owen and Chas. Erickson, directors.

Also members are Herman Barlewort, Wilhelm Finhold, Owen Bros., Frank Sayers, Ervin Marti, Al. Schilling, Wm. Bernhard, Milton Holstein, Mark Bros., Paul Christianson, Geo. K. Keuch, Geo. Mager, Mrs. Louis Ebert, Louis Lauffer, Lawrence Kohl, Emil Johnson, Joseph Scott, Wm. Hanson, Andrew Schroth and Marti and Krusemark.

This association is the first of a series of similar Associations which the dairymen of Will County hope to organize.

Pokey Autoist Menace To Highway Safety

The motorist who mopes along the highways so slow as to block the normal flow of traffic is not only violating the state statutes, but is a menace to highway safety, declared Secretary of State, Edward J. Hughes.

"While speeding is not to be condoned," said Secretary Hughes, "motorists should at least keep pace with traffic."

"To move slowly when many cars are on the road, is to slow traffic behind you, causing the impatient driver to take dangerous chances in passing which may result in serious accident. Collisions are frequently the result of failure on the part of some motorists to keep pace with traffic."

Secretary Hughes suggested that the motorist who takes an evening or Sunday drive for relaxation, will do well to choose some secondary road or country lane where traffic is not so heavy.

According to Secretary Hughes, Article VI, section 51 of the revised motor vehicle laws of Illinois provides that:

"No person shall drive a motor vehicle at such slow speed as to impede or block normal and reasonable movement of traffic except when reduced speed is necessary for safe operation or in compliance with law."

"Police officers are hereby authorized to enforce this provision by directions to drivers, and in the event of apparent wilful disobedience to this provision and refusal to comply with direction of an officer in accordance herewith the continued slow operation of a driver shall be a misdemeanor."

A whale can be drowned if it cannot obtain oxygen; some species cannot remain under the surface for more than an hour at a time, while others, like the great rorqual whales, can remain submerged for 12 hours.

To assure the success of your dinners, keep a file of the favorite dishes of your favorite guests.

To prevent eggs from splattering while using an egg beater, cut a piece of wax paper just the size necessary to cover the bowl being used. Then slit the paper and pass the beater through it.

Here's a delicious recipe for APRICOT GINGERBREAD TURNOVER: Cream 1/4 cup shortening and 1 cup light brown sugar. Sift together 3 cups flour, 1/2 teaspoon baking soda, 1 teaspoon baking powder, 1/4 teaspoon salt, 1 teaspoon ginger, and 1 teaspoon cinnamon; and add to first mixture. Until ready for use store in refrigerator—preferably an air-conditioned ice refrigerator where there will be no danger of the mix drying out or absorbing odors. The properly moist, clean-washed air of the ice refrigerator will keep the mix fresh until you are ready to proceed with your baking. When ready to bake, remove mix from refrigerator and break up with a fork. Beat 2 eggs well and to them add 1 cup sour milk and 3/4 cup molasses. Add this liquid mixture gradually to dry ingredients; beating constantly. Blend well. Place 2 1/2 cups canned apricots (well-drained) in the bottom of well-greased square cake tin, and pour the gingerbread batter over fruit. Bake in a moderate oven (350°) for approximately 45 minutes. Remove by inverting cake pan. Serve warm with whipped cream.

If you want to flavor soups with onion without directly adding the onion to the soup, buy an aluminum tea-ball at any dime store and drop the tea-ball, full of chopped onion, into the soup while in the making.

When lingerie straps on slips and brassieres wear out try replacing them with narrow silk elastic. The elastic takes up the strain caused by moving around and reaching.

Try using candy lemon drops instead of sugar in hot tea. They give the tea an excellent flavor and add a novel touch.

When breaking eggs for muffins or puddings, use the golden yolks for added richness. But place the whites in a bowl and keep the bowl in the cold, properly moist atmosphere of the modern air-conditioned ice refrigerator, where they will not dry out or absorb odors. You will soon have enough whites for an angel cake.

If you have difficulty spreading hard butter on breakfast toast, place the butter in a small granite teapot and put near a hot burner. Then the butter will melt by the time your toast is ready.

A velvety-smooth MOCHA NUT ICE CREAM made in short order in any of the new-fashioned ice cream freezers: Soak 1 tablespoon gelatin in 1/2 cup milk. Heat 1/2 cup milk, 1 cup coffee infusion, and 1 pint whipping cream together and to this mixture add the gelatin. Stir until gelatin dissolves; then add 1 1/2 cups brown sugar and 2 beaten egg yolks. Blend carefully. Remove from flame; add 1/4 teaspoon salt and 2 teaspoons vanilla extract. Assemble modern ice cream freezer. Pour the mixture into the freezing container; adjust the dasher and cover tightly. Pack mixture of 3 parts ice and 1 part salt around the freezing container. Turn crank slowly but steadily. When mixture becomes too stiff to turn, remove lid carefully, take out dasher; and blend in 1/2 cup broken nut meats. Pack down evenly with a spoon. Cover ice cream with wax paper and replace lid. Draw off water and replenish ice and salt mixture. Cover and allow to harden at least one hour before serving.

On Friday afternoon, May 7, the students of the Upper Grade room entertained their mothers and friends in honor of Mother's Day and to celebrate the completion of the Sixth Grade unit on Europe.

At two o'clock the Sixth Grade presented a program prepared with the material they had used in class this year while studying Europe. A short talk about each country was accompanied by native songs and dances. Ruth Gee, June Schussler, Eleanor Cooper, and Virginia Gee each played piano solos composed by famous European composers. Both dances and songs were given by all the girls in the room.

At the close of the program the girl's chorus sang "Mother," and "Only One," in honor of the mothers.

All the guests were invited to the Upper Grade room following the program to see the European exhibit, composed of articles made in or brought from various countries of Europe. Many historic articles were displayed. The girls then served an interesting menu composed of foods representative of European nations. Among them were Italian spaghetti, Swiss cheese, and Pumper-nickel.

ZEP CRASH KILLS 36 AT LAKEHURST

20 Passengers, 44 of Crew Survive As Hindenburg Explodes.

THIRTY-SIX persons were killed and many injured as a series of explosions shattered and burned the German dirigible air liner Hindenburg when she attempted to moor at Lakehurst, N. J., at the end of her first trans-Atlantic crossing of the season. The catastrophe began with an explosion of the highly inflammable hydrogen gas with which the ship was filled, in one of the rear gas cells.

There were 97 on board. Forty-four of the crew of 61 escaped with their lives and 20 of the 36 passengers survived. One member of the ground crew died of injuries received as he was trying to aid in bringing the great silver liner to earth.

The morning after the disaster smoke was still curling from the mangled skeleton of what had once been the world's largest flying vessel. There were still a few bodies unidentified or unaccounted for.

In a section of the crew's quarters in the hangar which had hastily been transformed into a morgue, a small group of men and women filed past the charred remains of 26 of the victims in an attempt to identify them. Other detachments of sailors guarded all approaches to the wreck of the airship and all information was refused.

Inquiries Under Way.

Three inquiries into the tragedy were to get under way, Secretary of Commerce Daniel C. Roper was expected to be on hand to take charge of an investigation by the bureau of air commerce. Rear Admiral A. B. Cook, chief of the bureau of aeronautics of the United States navy, arrived to head a separate naval inquiry. Hans Luther, German ambassador to the United States, flew in and immediately went into conference with officials of the American Zeppelin company.

All this official activity, however, attracted little notice, for the mind of everyone is still concerned with the horror of the tragedy and in the ears of those who witnessed it still echo the screams of the victims as men were blown through the heavy glass window of the ship's observation room.

What caused the explosion probably never will be known to a certainty. And as to exactly what happened—the beginning and the end of the event were so closely merged together that even here the versions vary.

Even Capt. Ernst Lehmann, veteran of ten successful round trips on the ill-fated Hindenburg, could only mumble, as he fell into the arms of an American friend:

"I don't understand . . . I don't understand."

The following, however, is the story as related by E. W. Kirkpatrick, one of the ground crew who was standing directly beneath the huge silver bag when it burst into flames.

Describes Liner's Arrival.

The Zeppelin was scheduled to have been moored at 6 p. m. There were several hundred persons on the edge of the large landing field waiting to cheer the successful end of her first trip across the Atlantic this year. Among them were several holding tickets for the return journey, for after a quick refueling and inspection the Hindenburg was to have started back at midnight. It was first seen over the field at 4:12 p. m. (eastern daylight time) after making its customary cruise over New York. There was some electrical disturbance and a steady rain was falling. The lightning, however, was not considered by those on the ground as sufficient to be dangerous. Nevertheless the Hindenburg circled around the field and disappeared. More than an hour later its engines were again heard, but the ship itself was out of sight because of the rain. It did not appear again until about five minutes after seven, flying low and passing to the northwest. Just at this time, it was explained, there was a shift of the wind from the south-southwest to southeast, which made it necessary for the Zeppelin to come down to the field from the northwest. After maneuvering for 15 minutes it swung low over the field at an altitude of from 150 to 200 feet and at 7:20 the mooring lines were dropped over the side.

Two hundred men of the ground crew rushed in to grab the lines and start the 100-yard pull to the mooring mast. It was not two minutes later that there came an explosion from the stern of the ship, followed almost instantly by another, and another, forward.

Almost immediately, several witnesses declared, a blinding sheet of flame enveloped the entire ship.

Confused Nightmare.

So quickly did it happen that the covering was entirely burned off and the bare skeleton of the ship's duraluminum ribs was visible behind the sputtering flame and smoke before it touched the ground.

What happened next is just a confused nightmare to those who watched it. Miraculous though it seems, those who were literally blown from the ship can thank the force of the explosion for saving their lives. The ship by that time was not far from the ground.

There was a rush toward the scene then, as though everyone was drawn by an invisible magnet. Men from the quartermaster corps who had been standing by ran for a ship. Three trucks, a four-seater airline bus and several private cars were driven quickly across the field.

Men jumped to the ground, tearing their way through the bursting flames, and were dragged to safety.

The heat from the flaming ship was so intense, however, that rescue work was prevented for several minutes.

All those minutes are nothing but the reaction of confused impression by those who were there. And probably scores of acts of heroism will go unrecorded and unpraised—both on the part of rescuers on the ground and of the passengers.

Rosendahl Acts Quickly.

This chaos, however, did not last long. Comdr. C. E. Rosendahl, in charge of the naval airport, was standing beneath the spreading stations of the mooring mast. It did not take long for him to galvanize into action. A cordon of men was thrown around the burning mass to keep back the crowd. Other men were dispatched to rush through calls for nurses and doctors and ambulances from surrounding towns and villages. Meanwhile the injured were rushed to the emergency hospital on the field and given first aid for their burns.

"I was standing directly beneath the ship when the first explosion came," Kirkpatrick said. "All of us in the ground crew were reaching for the ropes and were ready to haul her across the field. With that first explosion—it was like a huge puff of igniting gas that sometimes happens when you open a furnace door—we all ran back. From there I turned and saw the fire leap out. Another explosion came further forward. By that time the whole ship was in flames. It didn't come to the ground with a crash, though. It just seemed to sink down easily, like a floating fire balloon on the Fourth of July. I don't even remember hearing any crash even when it hit, though I suppose there was one."

Mrs. Margaret Unger of Maywood, N. J., was one of those waiting to make the return voyage on the Hindenburg.

"It was the most horrible thing I ever saw in my life," she said, still white and trembling from her experience. "I wanted to look away but I couldn't. I didn't hear any explosion because I was too far away. But I saw the ship start to sink, and then a huge burst of flames. It seemed to sweep over the airship all at once, and I saw three, maybe more, exploded out of the windows."

Ship Out of Control.

Ames Camp of Lakewood, N. J., another witness, said the ship "appeared to yaw as she dropped her mooring lines. It swung almost a full half circle and seemed to be extremely hard to manage."

"Then came the flash and I didn't wait to see any more. I ran toward the ship with the rest of them."

Although the Zeppelin continued to burn for several hours and was still smoldering at daylight, it took only a matter of seconds to render it a skeleton of wreckage.

Late arrivals among the army of newspaper men, photographers and radio men found the roads blocked with cars and had to race back to Newark and return by plane.

Search for bodies of the victims continued by the light of the huge navy field floodlights. Work was later postponed until daylight, partly because the metal embers were still too hot to allow the searchers to make any progress.

Speculate on Cause.

There was much speculation as to what caused the explosion. Naval experts offered a possible explanation that it might have been caused by the grounding lines, causing a spark which ignited "free gas."

F. W. Von Meister, vice president of the American Zeppelin company, offered two theories—the first that it had been caused by an electric current induced by static; the second that the gas was set off by sparks from the exhaust when the engine was throttled down for a landing. This he said, seemed plausible, as the ship was valving gas gently as she came on the field, tossing over ballast to reduce her altitude.

"Ordinarily," he said, "she would have been expected to be perfectly safe the moment she dropped her lines."

Report by Rosendahl.

Commander Rosendahl forwarded a complete report both to the commandant of the fourth naval district in Philadelphia, his immediate superior, and to headquarters of the Navy department in Washington.

His explanation of what happened tallied in the main with that of unofficial witnesses. According to his report, however, it was four minutes after the giant ship had made contact with the ground that the flames burst out.

"Four minutes later," he states, "fire broke out aft, working progressively forward. The ship settled to the ground tail first and was completely on fire by the time the ground was reached. The fire burned for several hours and was finally extinguished by chemicals."

"Out of 97 on board, 64 escaped alive, including 44 of the crew of 61 and 20 of the 36 passengers. Two of the 20 passengers, however, are seriously injured. Twenty-six bodies have been recovered, of which nine are still unidentified."

What is the "Low-price Field"?

YOU hear a lot about "the low-price field" these days. A good many cars claim to be in it.

So whenever the low-price field is mentioned, remember:

Until Ford came, no average American could own a car.

Today all Ford prices are still low — with the prices of the 60-horsepower Ford V-8 $30 to $60 lower than those of any other car of comparable size.

But with Ford, "low price" doesn't merely mean low figures on the price tag. It means much more than that. It means low prices and low costs all the car's long life. Low prices for service — for parts — and, above all, for operation.

Both Ford V-8 engine sizes are economical to operate. The 35 horsepower gives greater gasoline mileage this year than ever, and the "60" delivers the highest mileage in Ford history.

Private owners, cab companies, fleet operators all report that the "60" averages from 22 to 27 miles per gallon of gasoline.

Check and see how much Ford saves you.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—Congress lately has passed and President Roosevelt has just signed the Guffey-Vinson coal bill. It is, therefore, a law. And presently, as a result of the passage of this legislation, you and I and every other person who uses soft coal will be paying higher prices.

Coal Will Be Higher

The increase in price that will result, however, is not the only phase of the Guffey-Vinson law that seems to be open to criticism. There are many who believe that in passing the Guffey-Vinson bill (and it was done under the lash of administration leaders) our government has taken a step which is very close to, even actually a step toward, fascism in America. It is an action so near to the policies of fascism in Italy that close students of the Mussolini plan say they can hardly discern any distinction.

Let us see what the Guffey-Vinson law does. It permits all soft coal producers in the United States to organize as in a monopoly under government control. True, the government is supposed under the law to fix the price of soft coal but actually the law is going to work out so that the producers and the mine unions will establish the prices, subject to the approval of a government commission. It will work out this way because the law has actually legalized the right of the producers to agree on the prices they will charge by virtue of the fact that those prices are based on the production costs in regional areas.

It is provided in the law that the United States shall be divided into 23 regions or sections. The United States coal commission is empowered to prescribe the prices, both minimum and maximum, to which coal from each of these areas or regions may be sold. In that manner, the law guarantees that the soft coal producers shall gain an acceptable rate on their investments. Since labor costs enter directly into production costs—indeed, they constitute a major factor—it becomes plain that whatever wages labor demands and obtains influences the level of the production costs and the result is a change in the selling price to the consuming public. Thus, when John L. Lewis, president of the United Mine Workers of America and head of the C. I. O., determines that the mine workers are not being paid sufficiently high wages, he demands an increase from the mine owners. The mine owners or producers, now that the Guffey-Vinson monopoly law has passed, simply submit the new costs to the coal commission and it has no alternative but to approve an increase in the selling price. In consequence, therefore, every bucketful of coal going into your stove and every shovelful that goes into the furnace of a home or the fire box of a factory carries an additional tax that has been legalized by law. So, we see the bulk of the coal industry pass from the field of free competition into the form of a monopoly under government control. If that can be described otherwise than as fascism, I am ignorant of what constitutes fascism.

There remains the question whether the law promoted by Senator Guffey of Pennsylvania and Representative Vinson of Kentucky is constitutional.

It will be remembered that the Supreme court once threw out the original Guffey-Vinson law. It threw out that law because it held that the original legislation attempted to fix hours and wages for workers and that, in accordance with the unanimous decision of the court when it invalidated the NRA, was an illegal act by congress. The labor provisions alone were discussed in the litigation at that time. But in the current Guffey-Vinson law, those objectionable factors have been omitted. There is no way to discover whether the Supreme court will find the monopolistic practice authorized in the current legislation to be improper except the hunch that such a declaration of policy by the congress is not in conflict with the constitution directly.

Some members of the congress opposed the Guffey-Vinson bill because they believed it to be unconstitutional. There were so few of those, however, that the house of representatives debated the bill only a day and a half and the senate debated it only a few hours.

Some sections of the soft coal industry objected to the bill but they were quickly resigned to the inevitable fact that it would become a law because of the power that John L. Lewis wielded over congressional leadership. The chief reason for the division of sentiment among the coal producers was that there is a wide range of costs among the producers. There are many mines which have low production costs and consequently they are able, or were able under open competition, to sell at lower prices than many of their competitors. There is another section of the mining industry where production costs are high and in consequence that section of the industry was barely able to scrape out a living return. Under the new law, the high cost mines will be assured of a reasonable return and that means that the low cost mines will gain exorbitant profit.

On the face of things, it would seem that the low cost mines would be all for this law because of the heavy returns they can make. Such, however, is not the case. Thus mine owners pretty generally, would prefer taking their chances in open competition because they can make a larger profit through a heavy volume of sales at lower prices than under the new scheme whereby the high cost mines are bound to get a share of the business.

Proponents of the law contend that there is an obligation to the owners of the high cost mine or to the workers they employ. But what, I ask, is the user of coal going to do about it? What has he to say and how can he say it?

Again, sponsors of the legislation explain that interests of the consuming public are to be protected through the office of a consumers' council. That is, there is a government official who is supposed to look after and protect your rights and mine against excessive prices. It may work out satisfactorily, I believe, however, that the odds are heavy against any of us receiving any benefits in this direction.

A few days after President Roosevelt signed the Guffey-Vinson law, Attorney General Cummings came forth with a letter urging congress to revise and tighten the anti-trust law. He said that monopoly was growing in the United States and that small businesses were being driven to the wall by the inroads of great masses of capital.

There is evidence that capital is massing. We need not look any further for proof of this than the Guffey-Vinson law itself which permits capital to work together—the only hindrance being that which is subjected somewhat to the influence of organized labor under the Guffey-Vinson law. The result is exactly the same whether the massing of capital takes place under private arrangement or under government supervision such as is legalized in the Guffey-Vinson law.

This situation impresses me as being a bit incongruous. It seems to be a circumstance where the administration is trying to run in two directions at one and the same time. It is further exaggerated by the fact that the President lately has spoken with emphasis about the rapid increase in retail prices. Yet, besides raising wages for labor, the only tangible result that I can see under the Guffey-Vinson law is higher prices for all of us to pay.

Surely, monopoly has a tendency always to increase prices. It has been the chief subject of harangue against monopoly and the Attorney General adverted to this fact in his recent appeal for legislation to prevent monopoly. But why is it bad for monopoly, privately arranged, to force higher prices and good for monopoly, legalized by congress, to force higher prices?

President Roosevelt has sent word around through all government departments to the effect that no government worker may engage in stock market speculation. He has told the civil service commission that "among the matters to be considered" when passing upon an employee's qualifications for retention or advancement, the commission may consider whether that employee has engaged in speculation in securities or commodities.

At first blush, this did seem to be a sound order. I have heard much discussion of the matter, however, that gives rise to other thoughts about it. I think there can be nothing more reprehensible than for a public official or employee to use the confidential information which he obtains officially as the basis for stock speculation. On the other hand, is it not questionable whether a government should try to tell any of its employees that they cannot invest their surplus earnings in securities as a means of increasing their income? The President said that "bona fide investments" are all right but the question for which I have not been able to find an answer is "how can it be determined whether the purchase of a few shares of stock is speculation or bona fide investment?"

That brings up of necessity the difficulties of enforcement. It also brings to the forefront a real danger. That danger is not as remote as it seems. I refer to the use of power in the hands of the Chief Executive to take away individual liberty of action.

5,000,000 Line London Streets to View Coronation Procession

London, England.—(Special)—A full day of mortal toil for the principals concerned, and a day and night of heroic vigil for thousands of spectators were required before George VI and Elizabeth, his queen, returned to Buckingham palace, full-fledged ruler and consort of Britain by virtue of one of the most splendid and spectacular coronations the world has ever seen.

Five million persons, it was estimated, lined the processional route, over which the King and Queen in the ancient coronation coach rolled solemnly the six and one-half miles from the palace to Westminster abbey in mid-morning and back again in the early evening.

The solemnity of the occasion was observed by the crowd, even by the 300,000, mostly non-Britons, who had come from across the seas to witness it. But the cheers were Heir presumptive to the most important throne on earth is charming, ten-year-old Princess Elizabeth.

hale and hearty and the attitude was one of celebration as the roar of the guns in the historic Tower of London split the air of the spring afternoon. It was the signal that George VI had worn upon his head for the first time the Crown of St. Edward, or Crown of England, and called for the cry from 5,000,000 throats as one, "God Save the King!"

Hotels Sold Out.

This was probably the most important point in the entire coronation ceremony, which was heavily religious throughout and extremely burdensome to the principals as well as to the 9,000 peers and their ladies who gathered in old Westminster abbey to do homage to their king and to display for one day jewels and trappings the cost of which ran far into the millions.

It was the climax of the occasion for which souvenir manufacturers had been planning for many months; for which every hotel and boarding house room in London and its environs was sold out; for which apartments rented up to $3,000 for a single day; for which the government had spent $2,600,000, with a prospect of getting back perhaps $400,000 from the sale of seats along the processional route at $2 to $250 a head.

Souvenir manufacturers, distracted at first over the abdication of King Edward VIII—for they had struck his likeness off on millions of medals, spoons, plates and other articles—later became jubilant. For the souvenir collectors were so anxious to obtain the mistaken souvenirs that the latter sold at a premium.

That the sentiment for the crown, which is the chief bond holding the Empire together, lives healthy and strong was apparent from the thousands who, not being able to afford reserved seats, took their stand along the curbs long before the setting of the sun on May 11. All night they had to stick to their watch and all the next day. Yet they did not even see the coronation ceremony itself. They witnessed only the procession as it passed up the Mall.

Queen Precedes King.

The ceremony at the abbey was only for the peerage, the persons of royal blood and the king's representatives. With the clergy, they were waiting at the west door of the handsome Gothic edifice, taking their places inside as the approach of the coronation coach, an ornate vehicle made for Queen Anne in 1761, was noted. Once inside they were doomed to sit for seven hours in their heavy trappings of crimson or purple velvet and ermine, never moving from the 19-inch seat spaces allotted them until the end of the day, after the King and Queen had departed.

When the coach pulled up, Queen Elizabeth proceeded ahead to the recognition chairs, there to await her lord. When King George entered, to the sound of anthems and prayers, he was introduced to the four sides of the assemblage by the archbishop of Canterbury, who assumed the mastery of the ceremonies from that point on.

It was the archbishop who, a few minutes later, was to ask the king: "Sir, is your Majesty willing to take the oath?" The king answered, according to the ritual, "I am willing," and the Archbishop questioned him:

"Will you solemnly promise and swear to govern the peoples of Great Britain, Ireland, Canada, Australia, New Zealand and the Union of South Africa, of your possessions and the other territories to any of them belonging or pertaining, and of your Empire of India, according to their respective laws and customs?"

"I solemnly promise to do so," the king replied.

"Will you to your power cause law and justice, in mercy, to be executed in all your judgments?" the archbishop asked. And the king replied, "I will." He promised further to uphold the clergy and the Church of England.

King Given His Vestments.

There followed a long drawn out communion service during which the king was presented with the various jewels with which the office vests him, and was anointed upon the hands, breast and face with the holy oil. Among the jewels presented him were the staff and sceptre, with the cross and golden spurs, handed down from the time of St. Edward; the three jeweled swords signifying mercy, temporal justice and spiritual justice; the king's sceptre with the dove symbolic of mercy and equity; the sword of state; the king's gold and diamond orb, surmounted by the Christian cross; the crown of state and the imperial crown of India. The jewels used in the ceremonies are reputed to be worth at least $25,000,000.

Then as the king knelt before the altar, the archbishop placed the Crown of St. Edward upon his head, but only for a fleeting moment for its weight is unbearable. He prayed:

"God crown you with a crown of glory and righteousness, that by the ministry of this our benediction, having a right faith and manifold fruit of good works, you may obtain the crown of an everlasting kingdom by the gift of him whose kingdom endureth forever."

The choir sang: "Be strong and play the man; keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in His ways."

Solemn, thought-provoking advice for the man who must wear the crown of one of the most important nations on earth in times when the seething caldron of the world's hate threatens hourly to boil over.

ILLINOIS BREVITIES

Mathias Hinterser, Granite City merchant, was killed by a Wabash freight train at a street crossing.

Mr. and Mrs. William H. Schmalfield of Bloomington celebrated their golden wedding anniversary with an informal reception.

Earl Parks, forty-four, World war veteran and druggist in Marion for several years, died in a hospital at Benton.

"Cap" A. S. Sisson, eighty-three years old, father of County Treasurer George Sisson, died at his home in Belvidere. He operated a livery stable there many years.

Sidney Smith, sixty-one, a miner of Taylorville, was killed when his car was struck by a Wabash passenger train while he was going to work.

State's Attorney Charles E. Mason of Lake county yesterday announced the appointment of Attorney Hartley E. La Chapelle as an assistant.

Robert E. Fogerson, eight, was killed when struck by a car while walking across the hard road near his farm home near Pana. A coroner's jury returned a verdict of accidental death.

While shooting down coal at the Nokomis Coal company mine Henry Bruckner, thirty-eight, coal miner, was killed by the premature explosion of the shot. He was an alderman at Nokomis.

Paul Ivantich, nineteen years old, North Chicago, was kidnapped by two gunmen in Waukegan, forced to drive several miles into the country, and robbed of $798 he had just withdrawn from a bank.

Cook county is trailing more than half the counties of Illinois in the matter of filling its quota for the annual Citizens Military Training Camp to be held at Fort Sheridan, July 6 to August 4. Many downstate counties have filled their quotas.

Charles E. Frisby, seventy-one, died at his home in Dixon. Frisby was captain of company G, Sixth infantry, Illinois National Guard from 1899 to 1916. He served as a lieutenant in the Sixth Illinois Volunteer infantry during the Spanish-American war, being stationed in Porto Rico.

The body of Levi Reed Patten, who died at the age of eighty-three at the home of his son, Levi Patten, in Chicago, was sent to Pana for burial. Mr. Patten, a native of Ogle county, farmed near Pana for fifty years. He moved to Chicago with his son after the death of his wife last November.

A group of Joliet business men have applied to the comptroller of currency in Washington for a charter for a new national bank capitalized at approximately $300,000. The applicants include Charles Nowell, wallpaper manufacturer; F. E. Schlunder, chemical products manufacturer; J. J. Cohen, merchant; Henry Eberhart, lumber dealer; Andrew Barber, real estate operator, and Louis Lager, attorney.

Lloyd's of London has wagered $20,000 that Charles V. Ford is dead. He is heir to an estate for that amount, held in Peoria, but because he has been missing 20 years and the London firm is willing to bet he is dead, the money will be distributed. The Peoria county clerk will divide the money between a half-brother and five cousins. Ford could be declared legally dead since he has been missing more than seven years, but this will not be done since Lloyd's has issued a bond. Should he appear, the London company will be the loser.

Swan A. Frederickson, eighty-five years old, and his wife, Mathilda, eighty-three years old, celebrated their sixtieth wedding anniversary in their home at Bloomington. Six of their ten children are living. They also have nine grandchildren and one great grandchild. The couple came to the United States from Sweden, bringing with them two babies under three years of age. They went directly to Bloomington and upon arrival had $26 left. They purchased an acre of ground with $20 of this sum and still live on the same site today, fifty-seven years later.

Six promotions in the Illinois National Guard were announced. In the 108th quartermaster regiment, Judge Robert Herome Dune was promoted from captain to major; Lieut. Col. Harold A. Moore, commander of the regiment, was promoted to colonel, and Maj. Richard J. Smykal was named lieutenant colonel and assigned as executive officer. Maj. John A. Prosser of the state staff was made lieutenant colonel and assigned to the 33d division staff, and Maj. Leo M. Boyle, 33d division adjutant, was promoted to lieutenant colonel. Maj. Philip M. Bedessem of the medical regiment was made lieutenant colonel.

Peoria Medical society will be host to Illinois doctors at the eighty-seventh annual meeting in Peoria May 18 to 20. Dr. R. L. Green of Peoria is president of the state society and Dr. H. M. Camp of Monmouth is secretary.

A tornado swept north through the village of Raymond along a path about 200 yards in width. The front of a two story building occupied by an implement firm was torn off and the roof of the village grade school was damaged. Windows were blown out of 15 homes. No one was injured.

Sentinels of Health

Don't Neglect Them!
Nature designed the kidneys to do a marvelous job. Their task is to keep the flowing blood stream free of an excess of toxic impurities. The act of living—life itself—is constantly producing waste matter the kidneys must remove from the blood if good health is to endure. When the kidneys fail to function as Nature intended, there is retention of waste that may cause body-wide distress. One may suffer nagging backache, persistent headache, attacks of dizziness, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes—feet tired, nervous, all worn out.
Frequent, scanty or burning passages may be further evidence of kidney or bladder disturbance.
The recognized and proper treatment is a diuretic medicine to help the kidneys get rid of excess poisonous body waste. Use Doan's Pills. They have had more than forty years of public approval. Are endorsed the country over. Insist on Doan's. Sold at all drug stores.

Three of the candidates for the $40,000 Hambletonian Stake to be trotted at Goshen, N. Y., in August, limbering up at Seminole park, Longwood, Fla., during a recent work-out. From left, are: Schnapps, driven by his owner, Will N. Reynolds, Winston-Salem, N. C.; Harvere, driven by Will Rosemire and owned by Henry Warwick, New Hamburg, N. A BABE IS BORN

By DOUGLAS MALLOCH

A BABE is born, and life begins with trouble, though it's only pins.

Already culture hovers o'er him
And clothing has provided for him.
If he has been so ill-advised,
He happens to the civilized,
Conspiring persons on the quiet
Already start to plot his diet.

The babe, the boy, and then the man,
They civilize him all they can.
He must have certain fixed persuasions,
And certain clothes for some occasions.

Created in the image of
His God, or something else above,
He soon becomes, while Satan chortles,
The image of all other mortals.

The babe becomes, of many a thing,
A subject, who should be a king,
And life, that should be all enjoyment,
Becomes his regular employment.

And then some day he lays it down,
A stranger in some crowded town,
And often wonders, when it's ended,
If that was just what God intended.

THE LANGUAGE OF YOUR HAND

By Leicester K. Davis

© Public Ledger, Inc.

BEAR in mind, before forming definite conclusions from your study of fingers, that not only the characteristics found in the finger itself must be relied upon for a correct analysis of the inner self; its position on the hand, degree of flexibility, and, second only to shape and length, the inclination toward or away from the fingers next to it are highly significant. Here is the second of seven types of second fingers which you will frequently find in your analyses of hands.

The Illogical Finger of Saturn.

The outstanding characteristics of this type are shortness and thickness. This finger is decidedly pudgy or peglike in appearance. With the fingers closed side by side the tip is found to be even with, or perhaps well below, the tip of the forefinger.

The whole finger has an over-fleshed look, although this is most noticeable on the under side of the nail tip. The nail is usually flat and inclined to be dish-shaped, and sometimes appears to be sunk below the surrounding flesh.

The man or woman with this type of second finger can almost invariably be placed as one who does little constructive thinking and finds it extremely difficult to concentrate the mental faculties on matters requiring reflective comparison or prolonged analysis.

If such a finger is unyielding under backward pressure, the indications of a narrow mentality are emphasized. If overflexible, the mentality is more responsive, though governed by externals.

Of course, with a second finger of this rather disappointing variety, there may be other compensating influences shown elsewhere in the hand. So do not be too hasty in forming a discouraging verdict until the absence of these has been established beyond a doubt.

AROUND the HOUSE

Washing Windows—Add a little starch to the water used for washing windows. It not only helps remove the dirt, but gives a lasting polish.

Removing Mustard Stains—Mustard stains can be removed from table linen by washing in hot water and soap and rinsing in warm water.

Soaking Salt Fish—When soaking salt fish add a small glass of vinegar to the soaking water and it will draw out more of the salt.

Outer Leaves of Lettuce—The outer leaves of lettuce, often trimmed off and thrown away, are more than 30 times as rich in vitamin A as the inside leaves.

With Fancywork—Before starting to draw the threads on linen for hemstitching, wet a small brush, rub it over a bar of soap until a lather is produced, scrub the threads of linen that you wish to draw, and they will pull out easily.

Butter Layer Cake—When raspberry jam that is not of firm consistency is to be used for filling a sponge sandwich cake it is advisable to butter the inner surface of each layer before spreading it with jam. This will prevent the moisture from soaking into the cake and making it sodden.

Beef Juice—To make beef juice add 1 pound of fresh, raw, finely chopped round steak without fat to 6 ounces of cold water. Add a pinch of salt, put the beef and water in a glass jar and stand it on ice, over night. Shake and strain it through coarse muslin, squeezing hard to obtain all the juice.

Boiled Whitefish—Clean a whitefish. To sufficient water to cover add salt and vinegar and a bunch of parsley and a quartered onion. Cook until the flesh separates easily from the bones. Drain and place on a hot platter, garnished with parsley and serve with a sauce.

Tomato and Lima Bean Casserole—Drain the liquid from a No. 2 can of green baby lima beans and combine the beans with a can of tomatoes. Add a little butter and seasoning, then mix. Place in buttered casserole. Cover.

BEHOLD THE STORY by Thornton W. Burgess

EVERYBODY TEASES PETER RABBIT

"HAD any more dreams, Peter?"
"Tell us about those tracks again!"

"Better find out what's the matter with your eyes, Peter. They see too much!"

This was what Peter heard every time he met any of his friends. They all laughed at him, every one of them, and all because he had tried to tell them that there was a stranger deep in the Green Forest who made tracks ever and ever so much bigger than those of

"Better Find Out What's the Matter With Your Eyes, Peter. They See Too Much."

Bowser the Hound. No one ever had heard of such a thing in the Green Forest, and no one believed Peter. At first they thought he was joking, but when he grew indignant and they saw how very earnest he was they thought that he had been frightened and had imagined that the tracks were a great deal bigger than they really were. Of course they were made by Bowser the Hound, and timid Peter had just thought that they were bigger and different. That's what everybody thought.

So whenever they saw him they teased him until it got so that Peter wouldn't stick his head out of the dear Old Briar Patch until after dark. You see, he didn't like being teased and laughed at. No one does. Of course not. But it was great fun for the others. Once Jimmy Skunk came to the edge of the Old Briar Patch and pretended to be terribly excited.

"I've found some tracks, great big ones, down on the Green Meadows," he cried. "Come with me, Peter, and see if they are like the ones that you saw in the Green Forest."

Right away Peter was quite as excited as Jimmy seemed to be, and he hurried to follow Jimmy down across the Green Meadows, which, you know, were not green then at all, but all covered with snow. Peter was so excited he didn't know what to do. It seemed to him that Jimmy Skunk, who, you know, never hurries, moved slower than ever. "What did I tell you, Jimmy Skunk? Now, perhaps, you'll believe me the next time I tell you a thing," he whispered as they drew near the place where Jimmy said the tracks were.

"Ho, ho, ho! Ha, ha, ha!" laughed Jimmy Skunk. "There are your tracks of the Green Forest, Peter Rabbit. Look at them, so that next time you will know them. Ho, ho, ho! Ha, ha, ha!"

But Peter was too disappointed and too angry to say a word. He just turned his back on Jimmy Skunk and started back for the Old Briar Patch as fast as he could go. "I don't care," Peter would say over and over to himself when he was alone. "I did see those tracks, and there is a stranger in the Green Forest, and he has got terrible great claws. I wouldn't go up there again for anything! No, sir, I wouldn't go up there again if I was starving and there was no food anywhere, but there. I—I do wish that somebody would believe me."

First Aid to the Ailing House

By Roger B. Whitman

REPAIRING A GARAGE

NOT long ago a friend told me that the doors of his one-car frame garage were beginning to stick; that he was having more and more trouble in opening and closing them. We examined the garage together, and found that the trouble lay in the rotting of the bottom of the post on one side of the door opening—a timber four inches square. The garage floor was concrete, but at that particular spot water had collected, and the bottom of the post was rotted to such an extent that the whole corner of the garage was beginning to settle.

To repair the damage, we screwed a 2-foot length of a 2 x 4 to the post, with the bottom 18 inches or so above the floor and well above the rotted portion. Putting an automobile jack under this screwed-on piece, we raised the post to its original position, in which the doors opened and closed freely. We then cut off the rotted portion, and replaced it with concrete. For this we built a box of light wood, about 6 inches square inside, directly under the 4 x 4 door-post. This we filled with concrete, using a mixture of 1 part cement, 3 parts of sand, and 6 parts of gravel, with only enough water to make a thick mixture. The box was filled full, so that the concrete came up to the cut-off bottom of the door-post. After three days, the box was removed, and the jack worked to let the door-post come down on its new base. This movement was hardly one-half inch. Protected by the concrete, there is no chance that there will be any further rotting. Later, my friend did the same thing to the post on the other side of the door frame.

The doors of my garage swing outward. In a heavy storm the catch of one of them slipped, and its door was slammed so hard that the horizontal pieces at the top and in the center were broken away from the vertical side piece to which the hinges are attached. At first it seemed that a new door would be required; but before going to this expense, a repair was made that has now stood for four years. The main part of the door was blocked up and the horizontal pieces forced tightly against the vertical side piece. Two 1-inch holes were bored into the edge of the door—through the hinged side piece, and into the end of the horizontal top piece. Two similar holes were also bored through the side piece and into the end of the horizontal piece in the center of the door. One-inch dowels of hardwood were then driven into these holes, and secured by nails. This repair was a complete success. Instead of being put to the expense of a new door, the cost was for four feet of dowel, a few nails, and less than an hour of labor.
